

Worksheet: Marketplace Model Comparison

Course 17: Skills That Pay — Lesson 6

Instructions

This worksheet is a case-study comparison, not a signup form. You will not create an account on any platform to complete it. Fill in each row using what you learned in class discussion and the Student Lesson doc. Remember: these are policies that can change, so treat this as reasoning practice, not a permanent reference.

Reminder before you begin: Nothing on this worksheet should ever describe a way to lie about your age or bypass a guardian-account requirement. If you're unsure what to write in a box, write "would need to verify current policy" — that is always a correct and honest answer.

Part 1: Comparison Table

Platform	Who can use it & how	What changes at 18 (or age of majority)	What I'd need if I wanted to use it responsibly
Fiverr
Upwork
Etsy
Gumroad

Worked Example: Jordan R., Age 16

Below is a filled-in example from a fictional student, Jordan R., age 16, thinking through this table. Use it as a model for your own reasoning — your answers don't need to match Jordan's, since your own situation is different.

Platform	Who can use it & how	What changes at 18	What I'd need if I wanted to use it responsibly
Fiverr	13–17 can use it only through an account owned and managed by a parent or legal guardian. I can't open my own account yet.	I'd be able to open and control my own adult account under full terms.	I'd need to talk to my mom or dad, explain what I want to sell, and ask if they'd be willing to open and own the account with me — and I'd still need to double-check Fiverr's current rules first, since I'm only going off what we studied in class.

Platform	Who can use it & how	What changes at 18	What I'd need if I wanted to use it responsibly
Upwork	Not available to me at all right now — it requires being 18, or the age of majority where I live, which is 18.	I'd be old enough to make my own account and use the platform directly.	Nothing to do right now except wait until I turn 18 (or check if my local age of majority is different) — this one isn't a "workaround" situation, it's just not available to me yet.
Etsy	Same as Fiverr — 13–17 needs a parent/guardian-owned shop account. I could sell my digital art through it, but not on my own.	I could open and run my own shop account independently.	Same as Fiverr: talk to a guardian about co-owning the account, and confirm Etsy's current policy before doing anything, since class material can be out of date by the time I'd actually act on it.
Gumroad	Not sure yet — the class lesson said it depends on my country and situation, not one fixed age.	Might not change much for me specifically if my country's rule is already different from 18 — I don't actually know without checking.	I'd need to look up Gumroad's current policy for my own country specifically, and probably still talk to a parent/guardian about payouts, since payment/tax rules for minors can be complicated no matter what the platform says.

Jordan's short reflection: "Right now, at 16, the honest answer is that most of these options need a parent or guardian involved, or I need to just wait. That's fine — I'd rather do it the right way than risk losing an account or getting in trouble by pretending to be older than I am."

Part 2: Your Own Reflection

Which model fits my situation right now, and why?

Write 4–6 sentences answering this for yourself. Consider:

- Are you closer to the "parent/guardian-owned account" age range (13–17), or close to/at the age of majority?
- Would you realistically want to involve a parent or guardian in something like this, and why or why not?
- What would you actually need to do next — verify a policy, have a conversation with a family member, wait, or something else?
- Is there anything from today's lesson that changed how you think about "just signing up for something online"?

Final Check (Answer Before Turning This In)

Read this statement and mark it True:

"If a platform requires a certain age or a guardian-owned account, the responsible options are to wait, to involve a parent/guardian, or to check current policy — never to misrepresent my age."

☐ I understand and agree this is the standard Lumexa teaches.
